

DEPRESSION IS A LIAR

Depression is a Liar

Books by Chandi

Don't Believe the Lie

Books by Chandii

CHANDi is the pen name for the author who is a licensed therapist for people living with ADHD, Anxiety, Depression, and Trauma. She resides in the Pacific Northwest where the river is nearby and trees abound. She enjoys writing, interior design, invention, and spending time with her dog, Posco. CHANDi is also the mother of an AMAZING just turned adult son who she cannot believe is about to fly from the nest.

DEPRESSION IS A LIAR

DEPRESSION tells lies. It whispers into the ears of those unfortunate enough to have been passed its gene, not “sweet nothings”, but “nasty somethings”. It has a very convincing voice. Depression’s VOICE is worse than Simon Cowell, telling you, after you sang like an angel, that, in fact, you do not have talent. The Depression voice tells you that you do not deserve to live, that no one loves you, that you are alone, and everyone, including your children, would be better off without you. It tells you that no one will understand and, worse, it begs you to keep the “secret” because people will think less of you.

Depression lies and it does it in all the ways that you’ve learned about lying --” lies of commission” or in plain terms the bold- faced lie, “lies of omission” or in other words, not telling the whole truth, leaving key parts out in an effort to deceive, and “lies of influence”, like when someone says, “I would never do that”, when really they did and would. They are trying to influence you to believe their character, when in reality, the fact that they are lying right now means their character is not trustworthy. (<https://www.scienceofpeople.com/different-types-lies/>)

Ok, now look below for examples of the above mentioned lies that Depression is known to whisper. See if you can identify which type of lie it is: commission, omission, or a lie of influence. I have included my answers, but perhaps you selected a different one from the list. Go ahead and write your answer on the colorful line after each example.

1. You don't deserve to live
2. No one loves you
3. You are alone
4. Others would be better off without you
5. No one will understand
6. People will think less of you

1. You don't deserve to live is a bold-faced lie because you have been given a life. You are living. It is currently painful, but the truth is that it does not have to be. Depression can be kicked to the curb, evicted, broken up with or, at the very least, moved from center stage to the mop closet. That is the truth hiding behind the lie.

DEPRESSION IS A LIAR

2.No one loves you is a lie of omission because what it leaves out is that people love you in the best way they know how. It might not be good enough but that is on them, not you. It also does not mention that you have yet to meet more people who will love you more than you have ever imagined. For Christians, it does not tell you that God loves you. For Buddhist's it does not tell you that suffering is universal, less about wanting, and more about being present in each moment. For Atheists, it does not tell you that you can do it. (<https://www.atheists.org/activism/resources/about-atheism/>).

3. You are alone. Which one did you choose? Well, I'd go with bold-faced lie. Look around you. There are people all around. Was there a person who smiled at you today? Did you look into your dog's eyes? Did your child climb onto your lap and give you a wet kiss and a hug? I'd be willing to bet that people reached out to you or sent vibes that they wanted to connect with you but because Depression was in your ear, distracting you with lies, you couldn't see it and thought it never happened.

4. Everyone would be better off without you is a lie of influence because it negates all of the ways that you have touched people's lives and it does not ask those people. Depression speaks for them as if it could be a trusted messenger.

5. No one will understand. It is all 3 types of lies. It is bold-faced because many people do understand. According to the WHO (World Health Organization-March 22, 2018) “Globally more than 300 million people of all ages suffer from depression”. It is a lie of influence because it wants you to trust its lies despite evidence to the contrary...despite the fact that so many people have understood including celebrities you have recently read about. Depression wants to influence you so that you believe its lies and remain in a miserable virtual reality. I mean if you and others captivated by its lies leave, who will it have to lie to? _____

DEPRESSION IS A LIAR

6. People will not think less of YOU because it is not you. It is difficult to know this when Depression is whispering into your ear. Those who love you know and those who have come out of the darkness of Depression know. It is like when you are watching a scary movie and you start yelling at the character who is about to be killed by the villain to run. The character thinks the movie script is real. The viewer knows it is a movie and can see the way out.

DEPRESSION IS A LIAR

So, if you are suffering from depression, it is true that you are NOT alone. It is true that there is RELIEF. It is true that YOU MATTER and are needed. Please reach out to a LOVED ONE whom you TRUST. Join a community of people who have been there so you can be SUPPORTED with and surrounded by TRUTH. Also, you can seek out the care of a health professional or call the national crisis line at 800-273-8255.

First numbered even page